The role of civil society and Non-Governmental Organizations

The role of civil society and Non-Governmental Organizations in global climate policy

Looking at the current disappointing state of global climate-change negotiations..

- the emissions cuts required by the Kyoto Protocol are minimal
- several major emitters of greenhouse gases refuse to take on binding commitments to cut their emissions
- negotiations drag on year after year at a snail's pace
- the core differences between nations seem to be expanding rather than shrinking

Some may wonder..

What is the point of NGO participation?

Is there truly a mysterious non-profit/ governmental power?

The principles of green NGO engagement in global/regional environmental politics appear to be the same as those underlying public participation in domestic environmental affairs.

When, in the second week of the 2009 Copenhagen talks, the majority of NGOs were shut out of the main conference centre, the banners protested:

“How can you make decisions about us, without us?”

Civil-society participation is founded on the belief that

“the ideal solution to a problem can only be found through involvement of, and discussion with, all interested parties”

So, when it comes to discussing environmental issues, there are two interested parties that can never be in attendance: future generations & soon to be extinct species and habitats ..... SUSTAINABILITY!

Intra- & Intergenerational equity/justice

The role of civil society and Non-Governmental Organizations in global climate policy

Our role during global/regional/national climate change talks/negotiations : We DO

- Observe- individually or as members of national delegations
- Demonstrate- attract attention
- Provide rapid feedback/information to media and public
- Publish research findings at side events/create a platform of discussions and dissemination of ideas
- Lobby- established trust and cooperation
- Engage in civil diplomacy /networking

And of course larger NGOs (like Greenpeace, WWF) can fight on different fronts at the same time, while smaller organizations (like MedSOS) may choose to join larger networks (EEB, CAN) and cooperate/collaborate with other organisations/partners.

The role of civil society and Non-Governmental Organizations in global climate policy

BUT our main task remains always..

...MOBILISING the MASSES at HOME!

Only when public engagement reaches the point that it affects political ...careers, will our politicians dare to take more active measures to tackle climate change.

Only changes in national/topic politics can give rise to changes in global and regional climate diplomacy.

Public campaigning is ...

dirty and tiring work that requires great endurance, resilience, knowledge, flexibility and effort!

But the more of this work that is done, the greater the impact NGOs will have at climate-change negotiations – and the more significant the results that we may achieve for the design of mitigation and adaptation of climate change!

And some more specific words about the work of Mediterranean SOS Network.....

Who we are:

A Greek environmental, non – governmental and non – profitable organization (NGO), active since 1990 for the protection of the natural and cultural wealth of the Mediterranean and the promotion of sustainable development

Main fields of intervention

- ☐ Climate Change – Renewables- Energy Savings
- ☐ Water Resources Management – Water Savings
- ☐ Integrated Coastal Zone Management – Sea Protection
- ☐ Biodiversity – Conservation Areas
- ☐ Urban Environment/Green – Social Economy
- ☐ Intercultural Dialogue – Volunteering- Environmental Education- Public Awareness /Participation

Alternative solutions and proposals for mitigation

strategies/action plans: (buffer zones against erosion, change of agri-cultivations, water re-use, bio-climate architecture, etc)

Added value in our actions:

-collaborating with local authorities

-bridging the gap between scientific/ research institutions, citizens and decision makers

-involving private sector by encouraging and promoting environmentally friendly and socially responsible company practices

The MEDITERRANEAN SOS Network collaborates with many European and Mediterranean NGOs, participates in international networks, and organizes international meetings which aim towards a cross-boarder collaboration for the Mediterranean
